The issue of the treatment of aged and infirm people needs primarily to be addressed by extended and improved palliative care facilities. Euthanasia and assisted suicide are not palliative care. In fact they represent the opposite and demean the society and individuals promoting or conducting them. Inevitably any change to the present law in this area will lead to the expansion of categories of people who can request euthanasia or assisted suicide. Safeguards to protect the vulnerable can never be adequate once any form of sanctioned euthanasia is introduced. Experience in countries where euthanasia has been introduced, such as The Netherlands, emphatically proves this.

I have no wish to appear at the enquiry
