I have nursed a dear friend through the last six months of a cancer battle.
My friend had a lot of fight and wanted to live to the last breath.

However I think had my friend decided she wanted to leave before her last breath that should be O.K. When there is no hope for a recovery and the only thing left is the steady decline and failure of ones internal organs...I think it should be up to the individual when they depart this world.

I don't know how I will be myself in those circumstances. However I know I want the choice of a humane, quick death over a drawn out painful one where I am insensible to those people who are in the room with me.
