Are Victorian laws adequately meeting people's expectations regarding medical options available at the end of their life?
The answer is a resounding no!

We who choose to, have the right to say how we want to leave this mortal coil , in the surroundings we choose, with people who love us and at a time and in a place that is right for us.

In an enlightened society, we should be able to ask for the assistance or the knowledge necessary, to make a legal, peaceful, pain free, as dignified exit as possible.

The current situation where a person has given themselves the death they want/need, and then their friends and family are arrested, hounded and their lives made a living hell, is beyond appalling.

When the time comes and I decide I can no longer live a particular way, I will not be interested in some professional telling me what palliative care has to offer.

My life, my choice= my death, my choice

The State and churches have no right to tell me the how, when, where of my death.
