Although we recognise that there are important differences between the university and the vocational training sectors, Victorian Unions believe that the same general principles should apply to the governance of both organisations. These include a commitment to rigorous staff engagement, formalised, independent and adequately resourced indigenous decision-making bodies, consultation with the campus community over major changes, a preference for secure work and a determination to prevent and penalise wage theft. Whatever the particularities of each sector may be, we maintain that adherence to these objectives will secure the strongest outcomes for students, staff and the wider community.
