I'm a mum of 2 girls and everyday I make it my business to educate my children on the important of looking after our home, our street, our school, our community, our city and ultimately our planet. As a mother, I care so much about the future of my kids and everybody else's kids and further to that I care about the future of all humans and animals. I suppose its a natural way of thinking for a lot of people.

My kids and I do our bit in our patch. We have nude food lunch boxes, shop at the local farmers market, pick up rubbish on the streets and along our beautiful Maribyrnong river. We recycle and reduce avidly and we compost all of our food waste.

Our daily practices give us a sense of contentment that we are taking some tiny responsibility for looking after what we've got and in turn respecting the earth.

We want our government to do the same.

We want the Victorian government to be responsible for establishing a sustainable approach to recycling in this state. We fully support a CDS - it works as proven in many other states!

The idea of incinerating waste is terrible. I'm fairly confident that when you burn or incinerate waste, whether it be plastic, medical or any other solid waste stream - that this causes air pollution. Do we as a intelligent species honestly think that this makes sense? I think this is a totally unacceptable way of handling our recycling. Its sure to cause knock on health effects - that we may not realise immediately but which may rear its dirty head in years to come.

We're better that this aren't we? Aren't we?
