Victoria needs to have a permanent ban on non-conventional gas extraction.
Evidence from NSW and Queensland has shown the devastation on communities, their health and the health of the environment as well as the productivity of farmland from this type of mining.
There is strong evidence that the gas emissions from these wells are dangerous to the health of residents who live close to them.
There is a need to move away from fossil fuels to renewable energy and the Victoria government has this opportunity to show that it can be a world leader, like Alberta in Canada, in dealing with climate change and moving away from these intensive carbon emitting energy sources.
Farmland and water supply are far more important than unnecessary, expensive gas.
