

To the Environment and Planning Committee,

I am a member of the Greens, and I support the arguments already put by them. I add the following short point.

Given the alleged risks of this method of obtaining energy, wouldn't it be better to be conservative and pursue the already well-understood renewable energy technologies that are available? It seems to me that that would be the more safe and sensible thing to do. They have (comparatively) minimal environmental and health risks.

I thank you for your consideration. I wish the Committee well in its inquiry.

Yours sincerely,

Andrew Conley

Andrew Conley

A large black rectangular redaction box covering the signature area, with a smaller black rectangular redaction box below it.