This area is chosen by many people for lifestyle preferences. It is quiet and nature can be heard in singing of birds and croaking of frogs. I particularly chose to live here for the lack of light pollution as I am a keen amateur astronomer. The air quality in Boolarra was also a factor in my decision process, the predominant South Westerly winds blow from the ocean and apart from the offshore mining industry the air here is some of the cleanest in the developed world. I migrated to Australia for this lifestyle option separating from everything and everyone I knew to start a new life in a country I felt had a better angle on the environment. However in my fifteen years here I can see that Australia is a greedy country driven mostly by exploiting its resources to fuel other countries growth with profit for reward. This profit is squandered and the only beneficiaries are the big mining industries and their executives. I am ashamed to be Australian, this is not the country I thought it was!
