For years the industry said that when pigs are gassed they die a peaceful death, thanks to whistleblowers/activists we now know that was a blatant lie.

This is but one example, but emphasises the important role that whistleblowers play, as long as activists are peaceful, they should be treated like all other whistleblowers - with respect.

The truth is that not all farmers comply with the law, and associated regulations, and the regulators don't always do their job, so this makes the work of peaceful activists critically important - they shine a light into dark places, and keep the public informed and educated.
