Subject: Animal rights, activists intruding on farms

I would like to explain that on a lot of farms the interference by animal activists is a major threat to the smooth running and good practise of the farm. In recent times, most dairy farms have been running below the cost of production because of low prices, drought, or seasons which are less than optimal so there is already enormous mental and physical pressure on the people who are responsible involved.

Any further intrusion could see a lot of people think it is not worth the trouble to stay in an industry which is so much at the whim of society.

Yours sincerely Stewart Carson
