Until the meat and livestock and dairy industries are transparent and willing to police their industry better, the animal rights activists are whistleblowers on an industry based on cruelty. We need mandatory CCTV in all farms and slaughterhouses and also an independent animal cruelty organisation which reports to the police and can inspect farms and slaughterhouses at any time, unlike the RSPCA who give notice and haven't had a single conviction after the whistleblower footage.

Ideally we should not need animal rights activists, but the lack of transparency and multiple cases of animal Cruelty means they are needed. If it wasn't for the activists we wouldn't know that pigs are gassed without being stunned in Australian slaughterhouses. As consumers, we should have full transparency over these processes.

We need the activists as we need to stop the cruelty. We are not a third world country, we know better.
