I wish to respectfully strongly object to any attempts made by the Victorian Government to stop any legislation being introduced to prevent information regarding abuse and cruelty to animals being brought to the public's and government's attention. The logic behind such legislation is faulty when: no biosecurity risk has ever been caused by animal activists seeking to obtain evidence of cruelty to animals; no farmer's personal/home property has ever been invaded by said activists who only seek to investigate property where animals are abused and kept in such filthy conditions that could never be considered fit for human habitation. The idea of bringing such legislation against members of the public who are seeking to expose animal cruelty and abuse goes against the whole legal system and seems, unfortunately, to be based on false and misleading premise.
