Re Victorian Inquiry into Animal Activism. Animal activists' invasions to properties are a flagrant breach of the law resulting in intimidation of farming families, their employees and also pose a biosecurity risk to a farming enterprise. The Victorian Government needs to adopt the same legislation as that recently imposed by the NSW Government in dealing with trespass, through the courts, following arrest. Journalists should not be exempt from entering a farm illegally and the response from the Police should be swift and effective, as no doubt it would be should a home invasion occur. If these activists perpetrate a criminal act, they should be dealt with as criminals.
