Animal agriculture is NOT SUSTAINABLE at the present time. I understand humans have been eating meat all their history. But in the present scenario when the human population is huge, natural resources are shrinking, animal agriculture has become highly unsustainable. In fact, humans in the past also never consumed this large amounts of meat that the present population is consuming. It is high time we should move towards a clean food system like moving towards a clean energy system. Developed countries like Germany, Britain, Canada, etc are making big steps toward a cleaner food system. Australia shouldn't lag behind. It is only the voracious animals that need to be chunked out of agriculture, not the entire agriculture, anyways. It will also be a bold ethical leap toward ending speciesism.
