I disagree with the proposed laws to make it illegal to expose animal abuse. I think the public have every right to know exactly where there food is coming from and what is involved in that process, it is this which allows them to make informed decisions on what they choose to eat. If it were not for the actions of whistleblowers and animal activists the public wold not have been made aware of the abhorrent conditions upon live export ships. The outright abuse that was shown to be happening in a number of abattoirs would not have come to light. It is also the acts of animal activists that have exposed the abuse and sub par living conditions on a number of farms. I believe it is misguided to make it illegal to expose that which the public have every right to know.
