

Inquiry Name: Inquiry into the Impact of Animal Rights Activism on Victorian Agriculture

Animal activists have uncovered many cruel instances of animal abuse that have occurred on animal farms that would never have been found out otherwise. Unless all animal farms slaughterhouses have 100% video recording of their actions that is publicly available they will always be hiding cruelty. Perhaps the reason they are not willing to do this is that they know the public will be horrified at even the legal standard of slaughter, and will choose not to buy animal products anymore.

Unfortunately due to circumstances animal activists have to break the law, and just like whistle-blowers, do not have anything to personally gain from trespassing and releasing information, but only because they care about others and victims.

Creating tighter laws and greater punishments for animal activists breaking the law would only create a greater shroud of secrecy under which animal farmers can commit cruel acts of violence and torture on their animals.
