

---

I am a third generation farmer. I'm a generational farmer. Since my ancestors settled here in 1869, animals have always been loved, welcomed and nurtured on our farm.

The landscape has changed as the farm has adapted to technology, environment, red tape, and an affluent society with the wealth to make dietary choices.

Wealth alone has given people dietary choices. The cash to choose. The decision between feast or famine!

Recent generations have never witnessed a "depression" and the effect it has on society, particularly choices.

As a farmer we value highly security, integrity, and take extremely seriously the trust placed with us to provide food of the highest standards. Morally, ethically, nutritionally, and healthy.

Animal welfare, for farmers, is everything when farming livestock.

If "well intentioned" even though mis guided people choose to break the law, and are convicted they should feel its full force !!

Pete Gibson

Sent from my iPad