Extending the free tramzone by a few more stops north (covering the University of Melbourne) would be a step in the right direction. This would help students immensely, particularly those who have to juggle their education with essential work to pay for living expenses. It can only be beneficial to society and the economy in the long run if we can ease the financial strain on working students so they can focus more on their education and desired career-targeted/volunteering experience as these will ultimately lead to better contributions to society once they graduate.
