Re: Bike passing laws amendment in Victoria.

I would be in favour of the suggested change.

The law at the moment does not specifically mention bikes and that is one of the main points in changing. This change should be a no-brainer and supported.

The focus on bike safety needs ramping up obviously as more people take to bikes like myself. (started riding July at 60 years, completed Around the Bay at 60).

If cars pass at 1metre there wont be any bike accidents caused by cars.

Currently the law states a safe distance. Hmmm, that is in the judgement of the driver and sometimes tragically wrong. I could pass a bike in my car at 30cm space and feel it was a safe distance and never going to hit the bike until..... The fact that drivers are allowed to go closer than 1meter means they do.

This submission is brief I know but to the point I hope, regards Robert
