i have concerns that the rspca are more about campaigns than welfare. this is so evident in their push for everyone to adopt not buy a puppy. the mis information that abounds within their group and via their website is astounding - listing breed specific diseases that have NEVER been recorded in Australia; Spaying dogs from 8weeks regardless of the compelling evidence of the harm caused to the bitch (behavioural & growth) - the evidence they cite is based upon studies that included felines (who incidently dont show the same issues from early neutering); they have an uncanny knack of finding a cause (french bulldogs at the moment) to champion when the sights are locked on them, They 'find' terrible cruelty cases often months & years after they were first reported (bulla horses, Greyhounds) and always at fantastic times for themselves, on the eve of announcements of extended funding. They are 'employed' by the govt to the tune of millions, but nowhere does this appear to be means tested. just reading their submission to the committee regarding the domestic animal bill proposed changes, shows just how far out of touch this 'charity' actually is. they have long ceased to be a voice for abused animals and have become a money making machine whose next venture would appear to be into 'Rescue Retail'. if proposed changes were to go through regarding the bill previously mentioned, the one body that stands to prosper the most will be the RSPCA.
