When he first sighted the east coast of Australia, James Cook described it as, "a land of smoke" Where we live just about all native flora and fauna has evolved with regular fire events both cool and hot in the landscape. Can policies influence evolution? or should evolution influence policies? I prefer the latter. Please DO NOT stop prescribed burns- we need more as raging bushfires make a hell of a lot more smoke than an prescribed burns, plus the detestation that follows bushfires is immeasurable.
