I am greatly concerned about the biodiversity of Victoria and the diminishing bushland, not to mention global warming. For our flora and fauna to survive they need undisturbed bushland, places to roam free, with suitable vegetation where insects thrive so that animal life can thrive too. Cutting down burnt areas is depriving animals of life giving food and shelter and hindering the regeneration of the forests.

With global warming comes changes to the weather and is increasing the likelihood and intensity of both bush fires and torrential rain. We need to preserve the land by limiting greenhouse gases and ensuring that we don't destroy animal habitat.

Sincerely

Felicity Crombach
