Submission: The future of the Victorian environment and Indigenous values.

I am not an indigenous Australian but I am aware of the great regard indigenous Victorians have for their environment, which we all share. It is clear that science tells us that land clearing, logging, and forest destruction are degrading our natural places faster than they can ever recover. It is time to use and apply science to not only save our natural heritage, but to improve it for generations to come. Indigenous people see Government-approved damage to water, land, flora and fauna and they are outraged, as am I.

Legislation must change to protect, not destroy natural ecosystems that have taken millions years to evolve. I demand, with my indigenous fellow Victorians that this be done, and done before what has existed for millions of years is destroyed in a decade.
