Habitat survival is necessary for biodiversity and the continuation of ecosystems and species. The priority needs to be preserving habitat, not on using the resources of the habitat for profit by private or government industry. Workers in those industries have no moral right to work when their work involves destruction. Government should support retraining rather than subsidizing industry to profit from the destruction of native forests.

Climate change - which if it proceeds at the current rate will ensure slow death by poison of powerless people and fauna - is scientifically proven to be occurring at an accelerating rate. Much of this change is irreversible and will continue unless government enacts and enforces laws to diminish pollution by mining, forestry and inappropriate farming practices. Government is supposed to be a democratically elected body which serves people and the planet. Action is necessary or death will be the outcome.
