The Committee Manager
Standing Committee on Environment and Planning,

The on going, relentless and regrettably inevitable destruction of our natural environment for profit is unquestionably the road to the extinction of our remarkable Platypus.

One single decision at a time, one species extinction after another until we find ourselves wondering why we collectively destroyed our beautiful natural environment to provide a relative few individuals with a large number of zeros in their bank accounts.

We destroy our natural environment, trash our planet and simply pass the appalling results of our irrational behaviour on to our children and grandchildren because, put simply... the zeros are more important to those responsible in authority and their masters.

So... is fighting the inevitable a meaningless exercise?

Sadly I expect so.
