As I am sure you are all aware, recycling has become a very big issue in Victoria. My job requires me to talk to a lot of Victorians every day, and approximately 70% of those demonstrate outright that they care about waste management and conserving resources. Whenever waste management comes up in conversation, the governments inaction on waste management is always brought up and is always a source of disappointment.

Therefore, I would strongly recommend the government to invest in schemes and infrastructure that allow and promote a closed loop type of waste management in Victoria. Specifically, actions such as converting waste to energy such as burning of rubbish should not be presented as options at all because this would only create pollution in Victoria and exacerbate climate change.

As with the government's strong stance on removing the level crossings won the public support and allowed a reelection of the labour government, the government would find a similar large public support if they took a strong stance for sustainable waste management.

Thank you,
