Are there any additional themes we should consider?

new tests for drivers to measured impairment. At the moment, people who may have had cannabis a few days ago are being unjustly fined and licenses removed despite not having being under the influence. The tests can pick it up even after use three days prior.

Do you have any additional comments or suggestions?:
