YOUR SUBMISSION

Submission:

For most other pharmaceutical drugs a short research time is months before it's accessible. This discussion has been taking place for decades. The research that it's an effective medicine is there. Yet it's still inaccessible to many who would benefit from a variety of medical conditions. I think it's inhuman when people are forced to use medication with awful side effects when there's a natural one that grows in the ground but the government and stigma in society won't allow despite the research and the facts. Explain to me why my daughter has to suffer in pain and can't access or even trial a medicine that might be beneficial to her spasticity, cramps, spasms and pain. That is relatively side effect free that doesn't result in muscle deterioration which is detrimental to her body and her well being.

Do you have any additional comments or suggestions?:

Look at the facts.
