marijuana being illegal does not stop use. many people who consume cannabis for whatever reason are constantly at the mercy of scammers, dangerous dealers, or marijuana mixed with other far more harmful substances, and get no protection because of the laws. additionally, cannabis is less dangerous than legal substances such as alcohol by far. alcohol is seriously damaging physiologically, and can cause people to act out in extremely harmful ways. alcohol has the potential to make someone hurt others or themselves, but cannabis use typically just causes a person to be a bit lazy (and there are still many cases of people who can consume cannabis and be just as, if not more, productive than when sober). an "overdose" of cannabis will only make someone unable to move for a while and maybe freak out a bit at worst. an overdose of alcohol can easily kill a person. overall, cannabis is barely harmful at all, especially compared to something like alcohol. There are risks of course, but nowhere near as bad as other legal substances. In fact as mentioned above, cannabis being illegal may be more harmful than otherwise with the risks associated of the lack of regulation in the market. the fact that it is still illegal in modern times is truly ridiculous and nonsensical.
