

Living in a Public housing has allowed me and my family to be able to live a normal life that everyone deserves to live. Despite the difficulty that my family went through while looking for public housing, at the end we were given three-bedroom house. It took us three years to find somewhere secure, a place where we call home and somewhere where we own to ourselves. Prior to getting public housing, we lived in emergency housing in St Kilda for seven months. We would've stayed longer but because we couldn't afford paying the emergency accommodation we had to go and live with friends and other family members who only had two bedrooms or one bedrooms. It was mentally and physically challenging situation but we had no choice. However, It saddens me that now we have somewhere secure to live, all of sudden the government decides to take it from us. Leaving people like my family vulnerable to homelessness as we cannot afford private housing. The government's plan to move people out of their homes and privatise the public housing has impacted my family and those who are in public housing in a negative way and has left them in confusion.
