I wish that more money and care was put into rural roads. Every day I worry that something will happen to my boyfriend during his drive to work. And when I drive my young daughter I worry that something will happen due to state of the roads and we will have an accident. It feels like city roads are prioritised over country. Country roads are crumbling and putting people in danger, and it seems a constant buck-pass between organisations between who is responsible. Even roads that are newly repaired fall apart all too quickly, why aren't the contractors held responsible, or made to provide guarantees with their work? Instead of just constantly lowering speed limits on country roads, how about they actually get fixed, and fixed properly.

Regards,
Jane Clifford
