Hello, I would like to add my voice to the growing demand for Parliaments in Australia to address the vexing question of Voluntary Euthanasia in this country. It is a human right to be able to choose to end one's life if you are suffering from a life crippling health issue and this should be allowed by law to be assisted by a medical doctor. Many progressive countries in the World have already legislated on this matter and Australia should not be a laggard. We are an ageing population and while medical science has prolonged life it has not been able to relieve suffering in many health issues. There is no point is living longer if that additional life extension is one of suffering, Regards Barry Hill
