Hello,

I write to express my concern over the Victorian Charter of Rights.

A recent case example of a government-funded group seeking permission to use a christian campsite for homosexual activity, knowing that they would be denied access. This was a deliberate attempt to gain further support for their cause under the various Charters that exist.

The Victorian Government has now reinstated legislation to ensure the different faiths can make these appropriate decisions where necessary.

This proves the law can protect its citizens in this State and Australia. It is incumbent upon the elected politicians to make wise decisions on behalf of their constituents, whether to uphold or repeal legislation.

Whilst I do want progress, I don't believe we need Charters in this nation to get it. Because of over-regulation wrongly determining which rights are more important, hence the deterioration of values, some [young] people are digressing.

For this to be reversed we need hope, not discrepancies.

The Victorian Charter of Rights particularly targets the life of unborn babies to doom. In fact many 'expert' opinions voice death as the preferred option for the vulnerable.

Have we lost hope to such an extent? Should we be dictated to by such groups?

We cannot allow these voices to override the law that must protect us all. This is a blight on our nation. As it stands these groups have a large influence on proceedings.

Please pursue direction which provides life-giving choices for the peace and safety of our people.

Thank you for consideration of this submission.
