To answer this question would be an unreasonable and unnecessary diversion of resources.

Energy and resources: smart meters

11 760. MS HARTLAND — To ask the Minister for Public Transport (for the Minister for Energy and Resources): Do concession holders pay less for the compulsory smart meter or do they pay the same amount but in smaller amounts over time.

ANSWER:

I am informed that as at the date the question was raised:

Smart metering infrastructure is being rolled out to all Victorian households and small businesses over the next four years as part of a major upgrade to Victoria's electricity distribution networks.

Electricity metering including the costs associated with replacing existing meters with new smart meters, and other electricity network charges are a regulated component of household electricity bills. Network charges are regulated by the Australian Energy Regulator. The various network charges are identified generally as the 'service to property', or 'supply charge' on retail electricity bills. The average regulated smart meter charge in 2010 is $68.00, and is generally bundled with the total network service charge on consumer bills.

Energy concessions are generally applied as a percentage discount on the total energy bill and therefore, as the size of the bill increases so too does the size of the concession. Consequently, concession holders are billed the same amount for the smart meter roll-out as other consumers, but receive a discount proportionate to the total of their electricity bill.
